Holy Trinity Primary School becomes an academy

A PRIMARY school in Oswestry has become the latest in the region to convert to academy status.

Holy Trinity Primary School on Middleton Road officially changed its status on April 1 and became part of St Chad's Multi Academy Trust within

The Church of England's Central Education Trust.

Headteacher Pam Edwards said the next half-term will see a number of changes, starting with a new name as Holy Trinity C of E Primary Academy and Nursery.

There will also be a new website launching on May 1, with a new email (admin@holytrinitycepa.co.uk) due to go live yesterday following the Easter break, and new signage at the school.

In a letter to parents, Mrs Edwards also said the school will be introducing a new logo to the uniform, but this will be phased in as new pupils join and when uniform is replaced.

The changes will also be marked with a Celebration Day on May 26 when the Bishop of Lichfield will be visiting the school.

National School

Welsh Walls

Oswestry

Built in 1841 by local builder, James Vaughan of Beatrice Street, to plans (available in Shropshire Archives) drawn by the local pioneer Thomas Penson Jnr of Willow Street, on land that belonged to Colonel Gatacre. The property is built in gothic style, constructed of loosely coursed limestone, most likely from a local quarry, with dressed quoins and surrounds to windows and doors along with decorative finials and chimney stacks and contained a residence for the headmaster, but as further teaching accommodation as required it was later converted into classrooms. The last of the masters to reside upon the premises was James Feather. The cost of the school being defrayed by public subscription, grants of £38 from the council of education, £200 from the National Society and £700 from the funds of St. Oswald's Sunday School. It was created a Church of England School in 1872 and re-named Oswestry Trinity Church School, but continued to be known as the National School. The school opened in 1841 and first catered for 220 boys, 180 girls and 150 infants, with integral accommodation for the Headmaster. On the 1851 Census the National School premises are a Private Commercial School, with the Head of the Household being Edward Wynne Snr, a former Excise Officer. His son, Edward Wynne Jnr is the National Schoolmaster. In around 1932 Kempthorne House was constructed to the north of the main school to form further classrooms and facilities for pupils. On Monday 5th November 1951 the Infants Department moved to the newly opened Oswestry Infant School, leaving more space for the Juniors. When the school closed in c1970, the pupils transferred to the newly built Beech Grove C of E Junior School. Initially the premises were used to accommodate the 6th Forms of the Boys & Girls High Schools and part of the premises was used by Fitzalan Comprehensive School as overflow accommodation up to at least 1987. During 1986/87 some of Woodside Primary School pupils also used the premises after the arson attack which destroyed virtually the whole school, while the new school was being built. The premise lay empty before it was purchased in 1993 by the current owners and opened as The Walls Restaurant in December 1993, this closed in December 2015 due to the owners' retirement. They plan to convert the building into housing as at August 2016.

The Hospital School

Towards the end of the First World War, Agnes Hunt decided to set up a school at the Baschurch Home to cater for the needs of long-stay child patients, so that they would eventually be able to return to school without prejudice to their education. The school was approved by the Board of Education, and the first qualified teacher was appointed in 1918. The school gradually grew in size after the hospital moved to Oswestry, so that by the time Miss Shipley was appointed Head Mistress in 1927, she had a staff of six other teachers. At that time, 115 children were receiving instruction. Many were suffering from diseases such as tuberculosis and poliomyelitis, which meant that they could be hospitalised for months or even years, and the routine provided by the school played an important part in promoting the children's emotional well-being. When Miss Shipley wished to get married the following year, she had to ask leave of the school managers to do so! This was granted, and she continued in employment as Mrs Keleghan until her retirement in 1952. When the wards were open-sided, as many lessons as possible were held outdoors, with beds lined up to form an impromptu classroom. Different age-groups of children were taught in separate ward classes. In 1961, the local education authority provided funding for a new school building at the rear of the hospital, overlooking the sports field. Groups of children were brought daily to the classroom for subjects such as drama, singing, cookery, and pottery. At that time, there were still around 100 children on the school register. The Special School building was used for over 20 years, until it was refurbished in 1987 as the Peter Pan Nursery for children of hospital staff. Thanks to developments in the treatment of childhood diseases, the majority of children are now unlikely to stay in hospital more than a few weeks or even days. The average number of students on the school register is now ten. To reflect this progress, the hospital school was re-designated as a Teaching Unit in 1992, and today has only one full-time teacher. This in no way demeans the value of the teaching given, but provides new challenges for the teacher and play leaders.
